The Return of Sherlock Holmes Adventure XXXIX – The Adventure of the Abbey Grange

Brackenstall, in a mad drunken fury,
Attacked his wife who was good and quite pure. He Ended up dead.
    Later Mary re-wed,
Thanks to Watson, that good English jury.

Sandy Kozinn

The dead husband was cruel and money he did fritter
He beat his young wife and when drunk he was bitter
    But the widow and her maid both had lied
    About the wife being beaten, gagged, and tied
Watson was the captain's jury and acquitter

Karen Olson

On the hearth lay Sir Eustace quite dead,
It seems someone has bashed in his head,
    'Twas a Crocker named Jack,
    Who had made the attack,
To defend she Sir Eustace had wed.

Bill Dorn

Another tale the "victim" head whacked
The lady speaks of 3 thieves who had sacked
    Beeswing in glass of wine
    Sir Eustace lies supine
Crocker tells all and agrees to Holmes pact
