

THE MYSTERY OF THE
RUNAWAY KING

ELIOT KEEN

July 02, 1905

The Mystery of the Runaway King

"Ah," said Sherlock Holmes, as he clambered down the mountain. "Here are five clues which will tell us about the runaway monarch. There is one clue that tells me that he is in plain sight from here."

"Oh, how do you tell that?" asked the girl.

"A very simple deduction," said Holmes. "You see the ruler is in plain sight, and there, sure enough, is the king himself."

"What else can you tell?" asked the girl, studying the clues.

"I see by the other clues that the king was at military maneuvers when he ran away. I see in what place the military maneuvers took place. I see how he tried to get away. I also see a clue which suggests to me what the game was which he so much preferred to military maneuvers that he ran away to play it."

See if you can find all of these clues.

