The Casebook of Sherlock Holmes Adventure LVII – The Adventure of the Lion’s Mane

Though Holmes first thought it a cat,
McPherson's pain wasn't from that.

When it turned out the thing
Was a Lion's Mane sting
A boulder then crushed the thing flat.

Sandy Kozinn

Sherlock told this tale from his Sussex bees
It involved two teachers who suffered in the lees
The dead one had loved a beautiful girl
Whom the injured one had considered a pearl
There is much danger in bathing in the seas

Karen Olson

Young McPherson shocked “the lion’s mane”,
And was still in quite obvious pain,
Quite soon after he died,
Holmes the culprit had spied,
Then he crushed the thing where it had lain.

Bill Dorn

Fitzroy falls prey to the “lion’s mane”
A mystery is the teacher’s bane
Sadly, a dog dies too
J. Wood provides the clue
The jellyfish a rock can restrain
